LOST LEDGE OF LA PANTA FOUND WITH MOST PHENOMENAL VALUES

The lost ledge of the old La Panta mine which was known as a richer high-grade producer than any of the fabulous valued mines in Goldfield has been found according to John H. Miller, who has samples that fairly dazzle the eye and stagger the imagination. The values run as high as $10,000 a sack without any apparent weakening of the vein from which the stuff is taken.

The discovery was made about a mile and a quarter southeast from the former La Panta mine, in the Pamlico district, eleven miles south-east of Hawthorne's Mineral county. The find was made by a prospector named Williams, who had been working a good looking copper vein from which he had shipped five carloads of copper ore. The vein suddenly faulted, and while Williams and his associates were bemoaning their hard luck they concluded to sink to see if they could not pick up the broken ledge. They were down only 30 feet and had gone another five feet when they broke into a dirty looking quartz that appeared to them to be nothing better than pyrites or mica. They were looking for copper and that was all they wanted. In a few days after the stuff had been going over the dump one of the boys thought he would test it anyway just to see what the rock contained. His surprise may be imagined when he found they had been throwing into the discard stuff running all the way from $5 a pound to $10,000 a sack.

The strike was made ten days ago by Williams who came in with some friends from National where they had been working for the Stall brothers. They opened a copper ledge, which about paid expenses and ran from $1.50 to $2 in gold. In sinking below the point where the copper values broke off three shots were put in when a vein of high-grade gold lying underneath and striking up the hill at almost right angles to the copper ledge was cut, with a width showing now four to five feet. After finding the nature of the new strike several tons were taken out that ran $800 a ton. The high-grade streak lies on the hanging-wall. Samples shown in Tonopah by John H. Miller are so rich that their bullion value may best be estimated by deducting the dirt. One specimen weighing 7 1/2 ounces runs at the rate of $120 a pound. The district has been located and relocated a score of times since 1880, when it was the scene of extensive operations. The ore is found in a well-defined monzonite, lime and porphyry.
